Scenic drive on road which followed lines of the mountain with short, straight sections, then hairpin bends. And after every hairpin, a new view revealed itself: vast, cocoa-coloured mountains fading to a hazy blue, bisected by a thin grey road. Sudden swinging of deep valley route to vast plain of eyes meet the horizon, be prepared for the feeling of isolation, inhospitable landscape and desertion.

We travel to marvel at some of the world most treasurable heritage of the Amazigh people. The soon to be lost to the world with manmade situation or from nature itself. They are the ingenious people of the Sahara, their mud plaster architecture from the Kzar, Kasbah to the granaries are testament to the people ingenuity of creativity for survival in the harsh region protecting oneself from the enemy and the securing communities.

Visit to the granary, the lost architecture heritage of the Amazigh people. A granary is a stone structure that blends into The Amazigh settlement of the Anti-Atlas region, be it on the mountain cliff or camouflaging in an oasis. It is a form of communal protection for valuable such as grains, cereal, dates, corn and etc. It serves as a storage to secure for unpredictable harvest due to the regional climate as well as a place for the security of invasion by other hostile Sahara nomads and the central government, Makhzan.

It is a symbol of solidarity and resilient of the Amazigh society while the individual buildings demonstrate the amazing craftsmanship of local builders. Depending on the Amazigh tribes, entrance to the granary has its unique custom and belief with a customary prayer of “bismillah” during the collection of grains and entrance only with a sexually clean body and removing one slipper. It is believed that the holiness of the granary itself increases the harvest with its storage.
